

A Mothers Day Letter 2010

This is dedicated to mothers from fathers and to strength of Family.

“Strengthening Family and Fatherhood”

Mother’s deserve to have congratulations and support from their partners when raising their families. As a part of Mother’s Day, the important focus should be as a support for the entire mother’s and the time and effort they provide for their children and their families. As a part of this Mothers and Fathers and children should be refocusing on the support of both motherhood and fatherhood.

The strength should flow from both mothers and fathers to provide a ground work and mold to their family as a part of enabling civilities and as a part of their culture.

Strengthening fatherhood should be a major priority fathers and mothers as apart of the foundation of a successful society. As parents they mold the next generation providing the critical bridge into the future that enables civilization to develop.

Fathers in their part give financial, psychological and emotional support to mothers and children. They serve as role modes to their children, communicating values of work, commitment, marital affection, trustworthiness, self-sacrifice, and nurturing supports. Fathers also play a critical role in disciplining and setting boundaries for their children’s behavior. Our efforts to allegedly enhance fatherhood while marriage itself is disappearing are at best problematic at worse hypocritical.

There is no limit to what we as parent can do. No law can force two people to love each other, but when we bring a child into this world together, we should ensure that the relationship or marriage remains happy, supportive, and loving. Finally the importance of a successful marriage or relationship should be the well being of our children.

To all mothers, Happy Mother’s Day, and to their children that adore them now and forever.
